After passing through Griqualand, Lake Ngami and Shona territory, Sebitwane and his people crossed the Zambezi River at Kazungula and settled in Western Province of Zambia. David Livingstone was impressed with Sebitwane’s intelligence and kindness when the two met in 1851. When Sebitwane arrived in Buluizi, he found the Lozi Kingdom very weak because of succession dispute which raged following the death of the 10th Litunga Mulambwa.

Sebitwane’s rule in Buluizi was remarkable. He became popular among his subjects within years. Sebitwane carried out raids for the sake of capturing wealth some of which was shared among all the people. He abolished ‘divine rule’. Instead he mixed freely with all the people and could eat his meals even in public unlike the Lozi Kings. He did not mistreat the conquered people instead he treated them generously. He appointed and retained many Lozi as Indunas. To demonstrate his sincerity in being one with conquered people, he married from the conquered people. Sebitwane recruited Lozis and non-Lozis into his regiment.
Sebitwane called all the people in his Kingdom as his children. He took measures to ensure that the Kololo language was spoken all over his kingdom to ensure national unity. From the broken Kingdom he created a new and prosperous Kingdom. The Lozi accepted the Kololo as their masters and settled with them peacefully for twenty years. Sebitwane died in 1851. He was succeeded by his daughter Mamochisane who abdicated in favour of a brother called Sekeletu. Sekeletu lacked the intelligence of his father, Sebitwane.

SECTION F (15 MARKS)

Carefully read the following passage and then answer the questions that follow in the Answer Booklet provided.

The Portuguese wanted to establish trade links between Angola and Mozambique. To do this they carried out a number of explorations across Central Africa. Various groups and individuals were involved in these journeys. Two Pombeiros left Angola and reached Tete in 1811. This journey was followed by another expedition in 1830 by two army officers Monteiro and Gamitto. They started off from Tete but were not allowed by Kazembe to pass beyond his capital.

A trader in Angola, Silva Porto began a coast to coast journey in 1862 and reached Bulozi in the same year before ill health prevented him from going further. His Pombeiro servants continued the journey and eventually reached the East Coast.

During these journeys across Central Africa, some Portuguese became involved in local politics and sometimes they carried out illegal trade without the authority of African chiefs. A good example is Undi’s Kingdom. These activities by the Portuguese and their Pombeiro annoyed the African chiefs and they tried everything possible to prevent the foreigners from entering their territories.

The Portuguese government, however was not very interested in African territories. It was more interested in other colonies such as Goa where the Portuguese had established large plantations. This lack of support from their government made these expeditions across Africa a failure. Instead David Livingstone’s journeys turned out to be of more importance to Central Africa than these Portuguese expeditions.
